

Give Them a Chance!

That is to say, your lungs. Also your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages, but the thousands of little tubes and capillaries leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well. Call it cold, cough, croup, or any of the family ailments, consumption or any of the family ailments, all are due to the fact that the air passages are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there. If you have a cold, cough, croup, or any of the family ailments, all are due to the fact that the air passages are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there. OLD MILITARY COURTESY.

The "Gentlemen, Fire First," Courtesy on the High Seas.

In the days when France and England were saying to each other, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther," and backing up their word with gunpowder, six English frigates, under the command of Captain Killgrew, sighted two French men-of-war. The commander's ship was the first to come up with one of the French vessels named the Content.

"The whole French crew," says the historian—it was in 1696—"were at prayers, and he might have poured in his broadside with great advantage, which, however, he refused to do, adding this remarkable expression: 'It is beneath the courage of the English nation to surprise their enemies in such a posture.'"

Admiral Howe, who, during our war for independence, defeated the French squadron under D'Estrade off Rhode Island, showed a similar humane politeness when a post captain. The story is told by Clark Russell's "Book of the Hammer."

While the British fleet was lying off Cape Henry, two large French men-of-war were discovered and Howe, with a press of sail, gave chase. Coming alongside of the sternmost, the Albatre, he was hailed by her captain to know whether it was peace or war.

"Prepare for the worst," replied Howe, "as I expect every moment a signal from the flagship to fire upon you for not bringing to."

Then observing a number of soldiers and ladies on deck, he pulled off his hat and begged they would go below, as they had no personal concern in the action. Seeing the red flag hoisted at the masthead of the admiral's ship, Howe told the French captain that the signal was out to engage.

"Begin, if you please," cried out the Frenchman.

"If you please, monsieur, you begin," answered Howe. The two ships delivered their broadsides almost simultaneously. The Albatre struck in half an hour.

"My lady," cried Howe to his crew, "they have behaved like men! Treat them like men. (Youth's Companion.)

HE ILLUSTRATED THE ARGUMENT.

The Clever Way by Which a Lawyer Established His Case.

Once, when Mr. Martin (now Congressman) was a district attorney in Texas, he was prosecuting a man for murder at Nacogdoches. The accused was a New Orleans drummer, who it was alleged, stabbed a man to death in a room at a hotel. The plea of self defense was set up, the accused claiming that the victim attempted to kill him, and that the knife with which the wounds were made belonged to the dead man, and that defendant wrenched it from him in the deadly struggle.

The defense brought the prisoner into court in the light summer suit he wore the day the killing took place. The prosecution, in which the wounds were made, belonged to the dead man, and that defendant wrenched it from him in the deadly struggle.

The defense brought the prisoner into court in the light summer suit he wore the day the killing took place. The prosecution, in which the wounds were made, belonged to the dead man, and that defendant wrenched it from him in the deadly struggle.

When it came Mr. Martin's time to sum up for the prosecution, to the surprise of everybody, he appeared in court in a dude suit of clothes as nearly similar to those worn by the prisoner as they well could be. He asked the jury if they thought he had any deadly weapons concealed on his person at the time.

The jurors gave a negative shake to their heads.

As they did so Martin stuck his hand inside his vest and pulled out a long-bladed knife and threw it on the table. Then he pulled a pistol from his hip pocket and threw it on the table. To make a long story short, Martin pulled out seven long-bladed knives and four revolvers that he had concealed on his person. He knocked the bottom out of the plea of self-defense, the jury found the prisoner guilty and a few months later he was hanged.

WHENCE COLORS COME.

Every Quarter of the Globe Ransacked for the Materials of Which They Are Made.

A well-known artist gave me some curious information the other day regarding the sources from which the colors of a paint box are derived. Every quarter of the globe is ransacked for the material, animal, vegetable and mineral, employed in the manufacture.

From the cochineal insects are obtained the gorgeous carmine, as well as the crimson, scarlet, carmine and purple tints.

Sepia is the ink fluid discharged by the cuttle fish to render the water opaque for its escape when attacked.

Indian yellow is from the camel.

Brown black and bone black are made out of ivory chips.

The exquisite Prussian blue is got by fusing horses' hoofs and other refuse animal matters with impure potassium carbonate. It was discovered by an accident.

In the vegetable kingdom are included the lakes, derived from roots, barks and gums.

Blue black is from the charcoal of the vine stalk.

Lampblack is soot from certain resinous substances.

From the madder plant, which grows in Hindostan, is manufactured Turkey red.

Gamboge comes from the yellow sap of a tree, which the natives of Siam catch in coconut shells.

Raw sienna is the natural color from the neighborhood of Sienna, Italy.

Raw umber is an earth from Umbria, and is also burned.

To these vegetable pigments may probably be added Indian ink, which is said to be made from burnt camphor. The Chinese, who alone produce it, will not reveal the secret of its composition.

Mastic—the base of the varnish so called—is from the gum of the mastic tree, indigenous to the Grecian archipelago.

Bistre is the soot of wood ashes.

Of real ultramarine but little is found in the market. It is obtained from the precious lapis-lazuli and commands a fabulous price.

Chinese white is zinc, scarlet is iodine of mercury and cinnabar, or native vermillion, is from quicksilver ore—lowa State register.

Vale Surplus.

The surplus has been growing small by degrees but still smaller have grown the once rancorous voices of the Democratic politicians who looked upon it with fearful eyes. They leathed it, they abhorred it, and such was their feeling toward it that they only wanted a chance to get their hands on it and exterminate it. They have done so. The Chicago Inter-Ocean makes the paralyzing announcement, "and here we are with only $12,000,000 of surplus, a Democratic newspaper being the maker of the estimate."

What a falling off is here, my Democratic countrymen! Where be now your gibes and your jests, your quibbles and your cranks, where-with you were wont to set the Bourbons in a roar? Where is now your $100,000,000, your $140,000,000, your $275,000,000 of surplus, wherewith you sought to frighten Americans into buying their goods of European manufacturers? All gone. A beggarly tale of 12 standing where you used to write 100, 140, 275. It is a sad reduction.

It is more sad to think, says the Oakland Times, that a number of otherwise sane people will vote for the retention of the Democratic party in power, even after this last and most miserable self-conviction of incompetency, or dishonesty, or both. For what can be said in defense of the present condition of the administration? Either Mr. Cleveland spoke truly when he told Congress that the tariff must be reduced to prevent the accumulation of hundreds of millions of surplus, or he spoke falsely. If truly, what has become of the dreadful $140,000,000 which he paraded in his message? Who has squandered it? The Democratic party most surely. If there were $140,000,000 of surplus in the Treasury, as Mr. Cleveland said, on December 7, 1887, and if there be only $12,000,000 on this 27th day of August, 1888, by what audacity does an administration so profligate as this has proven itself demand a renewal of office? If he spoke falsely matters are no better. Why did he go to Congress with a lie in his right hand, as the advocate of a Calhounist - Cobdenite policy? Either profligate or mendacious, or both, the administration clearly is. Upon what pretext does it demand a renewal of public confidence?

THE Salt Lake Tribune says the Democratic managers evidently intend to carry New York City if they can by a handsome majority. There were 438 Republican rascals in the New York Custom House, but so much care is needed to see that no mistakes are made that it requires 783 honest Democrats to perform the same work. What the country wants is that its business shall be performed honestly, no matter what the cost may be.

GENERAL BEN BUTLER'S declaration in favor of the Republican platform leads the astonished Democrats to pronounce "it a bit of eccentricity." Perhaps; but if the swivel-eyed statesman had spoken in favor of Cleveland and free trade, these same Democrats would be shouting about the wisdom of Ben Butler.

HENRY W. GRADY is endeavoring to parallel "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion" Barchard, and has announced the subject of his lecture before the Southern Chautauqua as "Cranks, Croakers and Creditors." Mr. Grady does not think it necessary to add that he proposes to discuss his own local Democratic party.

Herman Fredrick came down from the Comstock to-day to visit his father, J. Fredrick, who is very ill.

BLAINE INTERVIEWED.

He Advises That Cleveland be Given no Great Power.
 ELLSWORTH, Maine, Sept. 4.—Blaine was interviewed to-day. He said the Canadian fishing season was closed and nearly all the American vessels had returned and Canada will have none to operate upon until 1889. It was not advisable to clothe Cleveland with greater powers than he now possesses, since he has shown utter incompetency to deal with the subject. Let him enforce the present law. For Republicans to vote for the bill reported by Belmont's committee in the House would be a confession by them that the President's conduct, in refusing to carry out the present law, was justified, and would put power into his hands, which he would wield for partisan purposes. It was much better to let the matter lie over till the new Administration shall come in, which will be better prepared to handle the matter free from excitements of pending political contests and in ample time to protect every interest. To allow the President now to stop the export business of Canada through the United States would seriously interfere with several of the home transportation lines, especially those leading to Portland, and correspondingly depress the entire commerce of that port. It would also afford Canada a pretext for increasing its demands in retaliation for such inhibition, and render more difficult a general settlement by negotiation. The rights of the Pacific Coast should be remitted to the new Administration.

NEWLANDS-McALLISTER.

Quiet Wedding of Two Well-Known Californians in England.
 LONDON, September 4.—The marriage of Francis Griffiths Newlands, late of California, now of New York, to Miss Edith McAllister, daughter of Hall McAllister of San Rafael, Cal., was celebrated by special license from the Archbishop of Canterbury to-day in the parish church of Easton Neston, Northamptonshire, the seat of Sir Thomas Hesketh, Bart., whose wife is a sister-in-law of Mr. Newlands. The ceremony was witnessed by immediate relatives only. The bride was given away by her father in the presence of Sir Thomas and Lady Hesketh, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Sharon and Miss Jessie Newlands. The ceremony was performed by Rev. James Mountain, Vicar of Easton Neston. Miss McAllister left California four or five months ago with her father, who is in ill health, and has since been traveling with him in Europe.

The bride and bridegroom started for London, en route to Paris, shortly after the ceremony. They intend to return to the United States soon, and will reside in New York.

YOUNG MEN'S INSTITUTE.

Stockton Filled with Delegates to the Annual Conference.
 STOCKTON, Sept. 4.—The Fourth Annual Council of the Young Men's Institute was called to order at 10 o'clock this forenoon in the Masonic Hall, by the President, J. J. McDade of San Francisco, who delivered a brief address. The session was in secret, but about the only work done was the appointing of a Committee on Credentials. About four hundred delegates are in the city and many will arrive on the afternoon and evening trains. Many business men have decorated their stores. To-night there will be a musical entertainment at the Avon Theatre, under the direction of Frank M. King of San Francisco.

One Continuous Ovation.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 4.—General Harrison left Toledo, Ohio, yesterday for home. His journey was a continuous ovation, thousands of people greeting him at every station on the way. At the Fort Wayne depot the General met with a most enthusiastic demonstration of welcome, after which he was escorted by Lieutenant-Governor Robertson and other members of the reception committee to Hamilton square, where a stand had been erected, and a large crowd greeted the distinguished guest. The General made an eloquent speech in behalf of labor and American industries, at the close of which he was grasped by the hand by the thousands of people present.

Unconventional Evidence.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—The Morning Post is informed that the Times has secured evidence from Ireland of a sensational character. It is rumored that a Dublin man, en route from New York, is prepared to swear that he forged some of the documents which the Times printed.

ON THE BORDER.

Seventeen Desperadoes and Three Vigilantes Killed.

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 4.—The latest facts regarding the fight between outlaws and vigilantes near Paloduro, Armstrong county, Texas, shows that seventeen desperadoes and three vigilantes were killed. The former camped near the brakes of Deer Creek, and announced that they were going to catch wild horses. The vigilantes kept close watch and learned that they were stealing animals. Arriving at the camp of the outlaws a cordon was placed around it, and six men were sent forward with a demand that the campers allow an inspection of the wild horses. The demand was met by a volley from the thieves, which seriously wounded James Aldrich and killed two horses. The committee retired and gave the signal for attack, and from every direction a murderous volley was poured into the camp. This was continued until the return fire was completely silenced. Then the attacking party, which suffered the loss of three killed and seventeen wounded, slowly closed the cordon with guns ready to fire at the first sign of life. Their precautions were needless, however, for by the light of torches thrown into the camp it could be seen that sixteen men were lying dead, while the seventeenth was writhing in agony. An inspection of the dead proved that some of the most noted desperadoes of the border had at last met their deaths. Among them was Thompson's Kid, who for years defied the authorities of nearly all the Western States. Two horses were killed, and sixteen were taken and will be held for owners. There is now no doubt that one gang of outlaws has been suppressed in the neutral strip.

RETALIATION.

The President's Action Upheld by the House.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—The House has proceeded to a consideration of the retaliation bill. Belmont of New York, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, opened the debate by recalling the fact that he introduced a bill last year similar to that under consideration, approving the terms of the pending measure and recommending its passage. McCrory of Kentucky said the President's views as expressed in his message should be upheld by the country. That the message, together with the message on the tariff would be remembered forever. The President would have been subjected to criticism if he had endeavored to retaliate against Canada without special authority. McCrory discussed the motive of various treaties and touched upon the outrages committed upon American fishing vessels by Canadian officials.

Suspicious Frenchmen.

PARIS, Sept. 4.—The report that two German bankers are about to purchase the Island of Herm is creating a sensation in Paris. The alleged bankers are said to be German naval officers in disguise whose design is to familiarize themselves, by the aid of local pilots, with certain channels and currents, the knowledge of which would be of immense value in the event of war between France and Germany. The Island of Herm lies two and a quarter miles from the coast of Guernsey, in the English Channel.

Ohio's Centennial Celebration.

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 4.—The Ohio Centennial Exposition opened this morning. The city is profusely decorated and the streets are crowded. There is a great agricultural, mechanical and stock show at the Fair grounds. Six thousand Ohio military paraded this morning and were reviewed by General Foraker. Mrs. General Foraker started the machinery this afternoon.

The Price of Bread Advanced.

LONDON, Sept. 4.—Extraordinary distress among the poor during the coming winter owing to the partial crop failure, is not anticipated. An unusual quantity of breadstuffs must, however, necessarily be imported. The price of bread has been advanced by bakers.

A Crusade Against Foreigners.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 5.—The American workmen in the rolling mill at Coopersburg have begun a crusade against the Italians and Hungarians, serving notice on them to leave. Several collisions have occurred, and a number of Italians have left.

Murdered by a Crank.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., Sept. 4.—On Sunday, two respectable citizens, George Jones and John M. Willis, were murdered by Samuel Hare. The only excuse the murderer has is that Jones and Willis hurried for Cleveland. The murderer was arrested.

There is announced a meeting to be held at Mitchellstown, Ireland, on Sunday next, the occasion of the anniversary of the Mitchellstown riots. The police will prohibit the gathering.

The Parnellite members of Parliament have refused to have any further connection with the Cork Branch of the National League, on the ground that the Fenian element controls its actions.

Mr. Bowell, the Canadian Minister of Customs, declares that the retaliation policy proposed by Cleveland would greatly injure Canadian trade and is, in fact, just what Canada wants.

THE N. & C. RAILROAD.

It Will be Completed to Alturas—
Right of Way Secured Through Beckwith Pass.

Mr. E. Lauer of Alturas, Modoc county, Cal., has been interviewed by a representative of the Alturas New Era, which reports him as saying the following about the Nevada & California railroad:

"Did you learn anything regarding the railroad now building up the valley from Reno, Mr. Lauer?" queried the reporter.

"Yes, I did," answered the gentleman. "Lmet Mr. Fulton in Susanville and overheard a little conversation between him and a Susanville merchant. It seems that the Susanville people are not very friendly toward the narrow-gauge people, and are in the habit of shipping their goods by team from Reno, utterly ignoring the railroad. Fulton was in Susanville endeavoring to induce the merchants to ship freight via his road, and was engaged in showing the advantages the railroad would be to the merchants of Susanville, when the merchant replied that he did not care 'anything about the railroad, we can get our goods all the same.' 'Well,' replied Mr. Fulton, 'if that is your game, we have as much money as your merchants and we will also have a store, and we will sell goods for profit sufficient to pay the freight.' This brought the merchant to his senses in short order."

"I went from Susanville to the end of the road near the lake in Mr. Fulton's buggy. We went across the country through the sagebrush. Mr. Fulton gave me all the information of which he was possessed regarding the terminus of the line. The road will go east of Honey Lake to Belvidere, and thence on to Alturas. Mr. Fulton did not think the line would be completed to Alturas this fall. Surveyors leave the front next week and will run a line up through this section."

"Why are they building so slow?"

"Well, in answer to that very question Fulton gave this answer: 'It is a difficult matter to get railroad iron. At the present time we have but iron sufficient to lay ten miles. We have a ship-load now due, which is only sufficient to lay thirty miles more. We have horses to feed and a large force of men working. The road is a large force of men our iron would soon give out and operations be at a standstill for a month. With our present force we can keep constantly at work and make better time at much less expense than if we worked one month and laid off another. At the present time we are laying track at the rate of 1,500 feet per day.'"

"Are the company well supplied with rolling stock?"

"Yes. They have plenty of freight cars, and at the present time are negotiating for a 40-ton locomotive—a ten-wheeler. The company propose to build in Reno enormous repair shops, and are now grading for the same. I was told in Reno that the company paid for everything they got, and that financially they were sound."

"The company's passenger coaches are very nice and ride very easily. Of course, the locomotives and cars look small when compared to the big ones of the Central Pacific, but the little ones carry just as much and will do the work of the larger cars."

"Do you propose to ship your fall goods by way of the narrow-gauge?"

"I am going to try it, it will be difficult to ship that way until the terminus gets nearer. The Surprise valley people can ship that way now and make money by so doing. The company wants the business of this country, and they propose to build until they get it."

The Oroville (Cal.) Register, in a recent issue, publishes the following: As it is the policy of the road mentioned not to keep the public advised of its movements, our readers will have to judge for themselves whether it is correct or not:

The Nevada and California narrow gauge line is now being operated for a distance of some 77 miles north and northwest of Reno. The route originally was projected along Honey Lake valley in Lassen county, to open up the fertile regions of which Susanville, Janesville and other towns are the center. Recently the managers of the line became somewhat alarmed, apparently, of the proposed invasion of their territory by the projected extension of the Northern California road, the Ridolet line from Oroville, and they hastened to secure the right of way westerly from their main line, the plan being to tap the agricultural, mining and stock raising region about Quincy, Plumas county. They secured the right of way privileges desired, including many grants from the Central Pacific Land Department, and recently they began construction work on this branch line. It leaves the main road near Summit, a small village near the opening of the famous Beckwith Pass, and is projected to the Honey Lake Pass, westward to Johnsville and Quincy, and down the canyon of the Middle Fork of the Feather river. It is understood that a number of men are at work grading on this branch.

A TOUCHING SCENE.

The Evangelist's Service at the State Prison.

Last Sunday the services at the State Prison at Carson were conducted by Mrs. Wheatson, the evangelist. The lady has been several days in the city, says the Carson Appeal, and her face which has charmed everybody on the streets, was a welcome sight to the prisoners as it beamed through the bars on Sunday morning. The lady, who is a religious enthusiast, made an appeal to the prisoners which for earnestness they probably never heard equaled. Her face, even in her old age, is sweet and beautiful, and as she spoke the tears coursed down her cheeks.

When she began her address over a hundred faces were turned to hers, but as she talked to the prisoners and drew a touching picture of their childhood days, the evening prayer by their mother's knee and the cheery fire which they left when they went out into the world, these faces speedily disappeared and every head was bowed down as far out of sight as possible. Suddenly she stopped speaking and sang: "Jesus, lover of my soul, let me to thy bosom fly." Her voice is a very remarkable one, very strong and rich at times and as mellow as an organ.

The prisoner's voices gradually melted into the strain until they all joined in the familiar hymn, and above the combined strength of more than a hundred throats, the sweet notes of the woman's voice floated as clear as the stroke of a bell, sounding over the hoarse shouts of a crowd. When the hymn was finished every prisoner before her cried like a child.

When the service is ended there is always a rush to the flowers which lie on the table, but on this occasion when she finished her prayer every man sat mute and motionless, and for several moments there was a death-like stillness everywhere. Then she walked behind the iron gate and went down the stairs, and the hands in turn with all, speaking some kind word of encouragement to each. The prisoners cried, the spectators cried with them and even the guards, accustomed to singular scenes, joined in with the rest.

Those who witnessed the scene say that they will not forget it in a life time.

A Move in the Right Direction.

Professor W. M. Miller, of the State University, has been on a trip through Northern Nevada, undertaken for the purpose of making investigations in regard to the value of indigenous forage plants. These are very numerous and are already known to be very valuable, even as found in this wild state. Professor Miller has been examining the various plants and grasses with a view, says the Virginia Enterprise, of experimenting upon their cultivation at the University agricultural grounds. This is a movement in the right direction. At the Agricultural Experiment Station they should also try what can be done with the indigenous perennial flax, tobacco, poppy, potato and similar plants.

Jesse Carr's Swamp Land.

The Lakeview (Or.) Examiner says: As a land grabber Jesse D. Carr is developing into a genius. He is said to have taken up land in Modoc county, Cal., in the name of his stud horse Tom Lee, and to have been the inventor of an ingenious plan for entering side bills as swamp. A boat was put on the running gear of a wagon, and the witnesses rode over the land to enable them to swear, later on, that the land was so swampy that they had rowed all over it in a boat. Jesse D. Carr has 75,000 acres of stolen land surrounded by a stone fence that would take three days to ride around.

Extension of Streets.

At a meeting of the Board of County Commissioners yesterday it was ordered that the petition be granted requesting the extension of Commercial Row west to Ralston street, and the opening of Chestnut, Stevenson and Ralston streets southward from said Commercial Row, and that C. C. Fowling be appointed appraiser on the part of the county to assess damages, to act in conjunction with a Commissioner to be appointed by owners of the property sought to be condemned.

County Treasurer's Report.

County Treasurer Dan Boyd filed his regular monthly report with the County Commissioners yesterday. It is as follows: Balance on hand August 1st, $19,743.89; receipts for August, $2,100.50; disbursements, $5,268.29; balance on hand September 1st, $17,550.90. The total indebtedness of the county (not including bonds) was $19,143.43.

Bound for Reno.

The Austin Revue of the 31st ult., says: Three emigrant wagons, containing three families, arrived here from Steptoe Valley, White Pine county, this afternoon. They are bound for Reno, and have been eight days on the road. There were about twenty head of horses in the band. Four men were in the party.

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Elmer Leary." Thus wrote W. C. Hamrick & Co. of Shelby, N. C. Get a trial bottle at S. J. Hodgkinson's drug store.

POLITICAL POINTS.

President Cleveland is trying to swap horses in the middle of the stream.

The Democratic party lost the Presidency once by attempting to run away from its principles.—New York World.

Free Trade among ourselves and Protection against foreign competition. That is the essence of the Republican-American system.

Mr. Cleveland's contribution of $10,000 to the Democratic campaign fund leads to a suspicion that he is fearful of the November result.

Under Cleveland's "Civil Service Reform," 738 Democrats do the work in the New York Custom House which 438 Republicans formerly did.

P. H. Spellman, a leading man in the ranks of the Labor party and the old Greenback party, is working for the election of Harrison and Morton.

London Pall Mall Gazette: English free traders would be well advised if they moderated the ecstasy of their jubilation over President Cleveland's message.

The State Convention of the Connecticut Democrats is about to meet and they are as much at sea as ever. The Nutmeg Democracy is badly demoralized.

A good many Democratic editors seemed concerned just now about the outbreak of a war with Canada. They would all have to move into Mexico in that case to escape the draft

A Wonderful Remedy.

The value of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, in the protection it affords from the danger of pulmonary disorders cannot be over-estimated. Mr. C. K. Phillips, Pittsburg, Pa., writes: "About three years ago I had severe Laryngitis, which resulted in chronic hoarseness. By the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral I have since entirely regained my health." Mr. Henry Russell, Excelsior Printing Co., New York, writes: "Influenza became epidemic in my neighborhood. Several members of my family suffered severely with it, and all of whom took Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and were cured by it in a few days. It is a wonderful medicine for Influenza. Too much cannot be said in its favor."

E. M. Sargent, of Andover, Mass., says: "I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral about the year 1882, as a family medicine, for Coughs and Colds, and have always kept it in my house since that time. I consider it the best remedy that can be had for these complaints." Dr. J. B. Robertson, Clayton, N. C., writes: "I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, in my family and practice, for a number of years, and have no hesitation in recommending it. It is an admirable preparation, and well-qualified to do all that is claimed for it." E. J. Stiers, Germantown, N. C., writes: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the best Cough preparation I ever saw. It gives instant relief."

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

has cured a Cough in a few doses. It always relieves irritation of the lungs and throat, and arrests the tendency to inflammation. It strikes at the foundation of all Pulmonary diseases, is without a rival as an expectorant, and is a sure cure for the most obstinate Coughs and Colds. L. Garrett, Texana, Texas, writes: "I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for twenty years. For throat and lung diseases, I consider it a wonderful remedy."

MYRTLE HOWARD'S SIN.

It was a charming scene; the village hall decorated with vines and flowers. The soft music from the band and the sweet fragrance of the June roses filled all the air with sweet sounds and rich perfume. The occasion was a strawberry festival given by the young people of the little village of Stanhope.

Myrtle Howard stood by the window, looking down the long hall, watching the ever changing scene with a smile of enjoyment. She looked very beautiful to-night—crimson roses in her beautiful hair, a white dress with crimson at her throat, while the roses in her cheeks out-rivalled the roses in her hair. There was a look of expectation in the black eyes, and she watched the door eagerly, and still the person she was looking for did not come.

"Surely Lewis will be here to-night," she murmured to herself. "How surprised he will be to see me here, and how glad I shall be to see him! My noble Lewis—not my Lewis, but he shall be, for love begets love, they say, and sometimes, if not now, Lewis will love me even as I love him."

Ah! there he is, and with him Madeline Vernon, and a shadow darkened the beautiful face as she saw Lewis Stanley enter with pretty Madeline Vernon, the village belle, leaning on his arm.

Myrtle Howard had been on a visit, previous to which Lewis Stanley had paid her considerable attention, and she had allowed herself to love him, while Lewis had only a brother's love for her, telling her often that she reminded him of his sister. He hadn't a thought that Myrtle cared for him, so when she went away he commenced to go with Madeline Vernon, at first because she was pretty and the belle of Stanhope, and now because he had learned to love her and hoped to win her for his wife.

Some people called Madeline Vernon a flirt, but she was not a flirt. She was pretty, graceful and naive, and of course had many admirers. The girls were furiously jealous of her, and though they treated her well to her face, they did not hesitate to say pretty sharp things the moment her back was turned.

Madeline and Myrtle had always been warm friends, but now, as Myrtle stood and watched Lewis and Madeline, saw how fondly he looked down into the bright, sparkling face, she hated Madeline Vernon, for she felt that Lewis was lost to her forever; and now, though Madeline did not know it, she had made an enemy that would leave no stone unturned to blight her young life, for the evil in Myrtle's nature had been aroused and it would make the hearts of Madeline Vernon and Lewis Stanley ache.

Myrtle left the window and with stately step walked over to where Madeline and Lewis were standing. "Why, Myrtle!" both exclaimed, "when did you come? How glad we are that you have come back; we have missed you so much."

"How pretty the hall looks, doesn't it?" Madeline said. "How sweet the flowers are! You remember what Lord Bacon says about flowers, don't you?" she continued, turning to Lewis: "Isn't it a sweet thought? The breath of flowers comes and goes in the air like the warbling of music." I must go now, for I see I have to sing a solo, at least the programme says so. You two can have a nice little talk while I am torturing sensitive ears with Cantilina; and with a gay wave of the little hand Madeline left them.

"A little thing of Lewis's Madeline line whatever I see Madeline don't you, Mr. Stanley? These three lines are just like her," and Myrtle repeated: "Smiling, frowning evermore, Thou art perfect in love-love, Ever-varying Madeline."

But just then the sweet voice of Madeline rang through the hall, and Lewis saw nothing, heard nothing but Madeline. He did not see the angry look in Myrtle's eyes, or hear the muttered words that were anything but complimentary to himself.

"What a flirt she is," Myrtle remarked, as the two watched Madeline come off the stage, and saw her talking and laughing in her easy way with several gentlemen who had surrounded her.

"Excuse me," Lewis answered, "I don't think Miss Vernon is a flirt at all." "I suppose not," was the answer, "it is very difficult to persuade gentlemen of it until they are convinced by experience. They are like children; they must have their fingers burnt before they will believe the flame is anything but pretty."

Just then Madeline returned to them. "Look," she said, "all the flowers I have here, Myrtle, you shall have this callily, for it is like you—stately; and this rose-bud and geranium leaf you shall have, Lewis, not because you deserve the gift, but because I don't know what else to do with it," and Madeline looked at him with a saucy smile.

Lewis watched Madeline closely that evening. Was she a flirt? he asked himself. He could not believe it. If there was anything Lewis Stanley detested it was flirting. He determined to keep a close watch on Madeline, and to find out for himself whether she was a flirt or not. He did keep a close watch; so close that the rest of the gentlemen declared that they could never get a chance of speaking to Madeline, for Lewis Stanley was forever by her side, and village gossip added nothing new to his hands over their tea-cups and thought that Madeline had met her fate at last, and soon there would be a wedding at Stanhope.

Myrtle Howard heard all this. How she hated Madeline for stealing from her the only heart she ever coveted! On one thing she determined: Madeline Vernon should never be Lewis Stanley's wife!

It was at a lawn-tennis party that Lewis told Madeline of his love. They had wandered away from the rest of the party to a little summer house hidden by the honeysuckle. They did not know that Myrtle had seen them and had followed them with slow, cautious footsteps.

Lewis did not suspect that other ears than Madeline's listened that night to his tale of love, yet so it was. Myrtle, back in the shadows, heard his passionate words of love, and when he asked Madeline to be his wife heard her answer, "Yes."

Myrtle laughed a low, mirthless laugh. "She'll never be your wife, Lewis Stanley—never!" And then she crept away, leaving the lovers all unconscious that before forty-eight hours the truth that had plighted that night would be broken. All night Myrtle laid awake asking herself how she could best separate these two young hearts. Surely Myrtle Howard's good angel must have wept over her that night.

The next day Lewis received a note which he supposed came from Madeline. It read thus: "Mr. Stanley: I must ask you to release me from the engagement which I entered into with you last evening. I said 'yes' just for fun. I won't carry the joke any farther. Hoping this will find you in your usual good health and spirits, I will say 'good-bye.' Madeline Vernon."

"Good heavens!" Lewis exclaimed, "this cannot be from Madeline; and yet it is her writing, and who else knew of our engagement? Madeline, Madeline, it cannot be you that wrote this cruel note," he cried in tones of agony; "and yet they warned, and Myrtle told me I should never believe you were a flirt until I knew by actual experience."

That evening Lewis Stanley left Stanhope.

All that evening Madeline waited and watched for Lewis, and when he did not come she wondered to herself if he was not sick.

Myrtle called the next morning to borrow some music, she said, but in reality to tell the news to Madeline.

"Did you know," she asked in assumed ignorance, "that Mr. Stanley has left town?"

"She saw Madeline start, while a sudden pallor overspread her sweet face.

"No," Madeline answered.

"Yes," Myrtle continued, "he left last evening; going to stay some time, so he told brother Charles. Very strange he did not call and say good-bye to you. A great many people think you two are engaged; such a place for gossip Stanhope is." Poor Madeline! she went on talking and laughing, with face as bright as ever; and few, if any, suspected the bitter pain that was gnawing at her heart through all her careless demeanor.

Myrtle noticed with a feeling of joy the pained expression in Madeline's face, and soon, to Madeline's relief, left.

At first Madeline was too stunned to think, and then she thought that Lewis must have left a note for her. She would go to the post-office and see; but Madeline found no note. What did it mean, Lewis leaving her like this, and only two nights before he had asked her to be his wife? Numerous were the conjectures about concerning Lewis' departure: the old ladies said that Madeline had jilted him, while the young ladies thought that he had flirted with Madeline. This latter comment was original with Myrtle.

"Go away, I don't want you; I want Lewis Stanley. Not you, Madeline Vernon, with your eyes of the sunniest blue; true blue, those eyes are, and they look at me so reproachfully, just as if you knew I had done you a great wrong. You won him from me, Lewis Stanley; you won your golden hair and sweet voice. Go away, go away, for I hate you, I tell you!" and poor sick Myrtle tossed her hands wildly in the air.

Fever had stricken Myrtle, and for days she had been delirious, calling sometimes for Madeline, but always for Lewis Stanley, muttering at times about some fearful wrong she had done him.

Madeline was with her at times, and staying at Myrtle's house all the time, for Myrtle called frequently for her, and then when Madeline went near told her she hated her. "Ha, ha," she laughed, "you did not get Lewis, did you? Never while I live shall you have him. I sent that note. Don't tell, will you, but I sent him a note. You sent one for him, and I will tell him all about it."

The doctor said she could not live, but her brother Charlie would not believe it. Maybe, he thought, if she could see Lewis Stanley she would get better. "I have heard of people getting well, even after the doctor had given them up; perhaps if she tells Lewis that dreadful secret she raves about, it will do her good." And so Charles telegraphed to Lewis Stanley.

Thus it happened that eight months from Lewis Stanley's hasty departure he came back to Stanhope. He went at once to Mr. Howard's house, where the servant ushered him into the parlor, where he found Madeline with tearful eyes, for all Stanhope knew now that before the morning's sun should rise over the eastern hill-top Myrtle Howard would die. Even Charlie, Myrtle's brother, had given up hope now, for the crisis had past and the doctor had said that Myrtle would not live to see the morning's sun.

She was conscious now, and had asked for Lewis, saying that she must see him before she died, and when Charlie said he had sent for him, she said she was glad.

When Lewis entered the parlor where Madeline was, she arose cooly and told him she would tell Charlie he was there, and Charlie came and took him to Myrtle. She had bade them all leave her, for she wished to see Lewis alone. Poor Myrtle! so young to die, so young to leave the beautiful world. And yet she did not care.

Lewis took both her clammy hands in his.

"Lewis," Myrtle whispered, "I have done you a great wrong. Tell me now you will forgive me. Oh, promise me you will forgive me!"

"Yes, yes," Lewis answered, "I will forgive you." He did not dream how much he had to forgive.

"Lewis, I sent you that note. The night before I heard you tell Madeline of your love. I was determined she should never be your wife; for, yes, Lewis, shocked as you will be, I loved you. Mine was an unrequited love. When I saw that you loved Madeline, all the evil in my nature was aroused, and I determined that she should never have you, and I sent you that cruel note. Lewis, can you forgive me? Heaven only know how I regret that dreadful sin. Can you, will you forgive me?"

Lewis answered, "As I hope to be forgiven, I forgive you, Myrtle."

"Lewis, grant my dying wish, do not tell Madeline of this till after I am in my coffin, then bring her to look at me, tell her of the note. Surely she will forgive me then, when she looks at my dead face, and knows that I can do her no more harm. She has been a true friend to me, and how have I repaid that friendship! And now, Lewis, good-bye; I shall never see you in this world again, but my earnest prayer is, that you and Madeline may be happy. Good-bye."

Lewis stooped and imprinted a kiss on the pale forehead and left Myrtle Howard. That night she died.

Two days after, Madeline and Lewis stood beside the open casket looking at the pale, peaceful face of the dead girl, and Lewis told Madeline, as Myrtle had requested, the great wrong she had done them both. "Oh, Lewis surely I would have forgiven her; why did she not let me tell her how freely I forgave her, before she died?"

Then there Lewis and Madeline renewed their engagement, and not a bitter thought did they have for Myrtle. Five years, happy ones for Mr. and Mrs. Stanley, have passed since Myrtle was laid "under the daisies." They have a little girl, a sweet little girl, who answers to the name of Myrtle. They never think of the dead Myrtle save with a pitying tenderness for her great sin and her early death.
